Magic: ManaStrike, a real-time strategy game that needs to reasonably use cards and pick up a proper hero, makes many people addicted to it. With NoxPlayer, can people play Magic: ManaStrike on PC on a full size screen. Tips for playing magic: ManaStrike on... Read... February 7, 2020 NoxPlayerFAQ, TutorialMagic: ManaStrike, Magic: ManaStrike Game, Magic: ManaStrike on PC, Magic: ManaStrike on PC with LdPlayer, Magic: ManaStrike on PC with MenuPlay, Magic: ManaStrike on PC with Mumi, Magic: ManaStrike on PC with NoxPlayer Back in 2018, when Wizards of the Coast introduced the ManaStrike and Planesiege brands, the MTG community immediately caught wind of the move. With more than 340,000 members on Reddit and one of the most iconic game franchises, the Magic's first mobile release: The Gathering universe already had everything it needs to succeed. Except for a good application, that is. Towards the end of 2019, Netmarble, the creators of Marvel: Future Fight and King of Fighters ALLSTAR, soft released Magic: ManaStrike on App Stores in Canada and South Korea. If the previous two games are any indication, MTG's first foray into the mobile community will be a huge success. Smooth release fun How you might have witnessed it with our Black Desert Mobile and CoD: Mobile sneak peeks, geographical boundaries never prevented us from trying on awesome new games in the soft release phase and ManaStrike is no different. Oops, we did it again. The devs played with our hearts, so we missed out on the game. We just couldn't wait to get our hands on it and, after reading this review, neither will it. We've been playing the game for a couple of days now, dealing in various Planeswalkers and unit combinations with great success. There's a battle pass you can buy for $7 or so, which offers great value. If you ask us, the Magic Pass rewards are absolutely worth it (almost the best and only purchase you have to make), not to mention the fact that you will be supporting the people behind this awesome game. While we still can't tell how balanced the heroes are, the game seems pretty ready to go. Since he's a real-time multiplayer fighter, we'd love to also see a one-player mode where franchise fans can enjoy progressing through a story that has saved them the fate of the multiverse. There is a reason why MTG was named the most played commercial card game ever and the fact that they have more than 18,000 unique cards might have something to do with it. ManaStrike Game Design To give you a hint of what you expect in the game, ManaStrike plays a lot like Star Wars: Force Arena, but in the MTG universe. Every time you click on the battle, you match a player who has the same rank as you - of course, there's a classified mode. Wait for there to be a little bit MMR variation, however. In the arena, each of you has 3 structures – a tutor and two towers. The first player to kill the enemy keeper wins. Sounds simple, doesn't it? Well, it is and it isn't. To get to Keeper, who incidentally packs a punch, will have to go through one or both towers and are not so easy to defeat. The fun part is the fact that each of you control a Planeswalker as well as 7 cards, a setup that is complex enough for strategy to matter, just like at MTG Arena. The style of play is not based on turns, however. Cards have a command cost, but can be issued at any time, as long as you have the resources. They can summon units, spells and even structures, while their rarity goes from common to uncommon and rare. Play Magic: ManaStrike on PC Certain cards (the brass edge cards, which are supposed to be colorless) are usable by any Plain Walker, but most of them are not. Each hero has one or two colors (the traditional colors of magic) associated with them, which means they can only use these types of cards when a fight deck is formed. Since most of these awesome protagonists have their own skills and can easily turn the tide of combat when used well, the game certainly has a lot of depth to it. You'll have several attempts to use a Planeswalker, but its ability can only be activated once after you put them on the ground. So far, every time we got into an MM battle, we've had a ridiculous amount of fun. The Planeswalkers (and their cards) are varied enough to change things, which means you have to do more than do face-to-face with the keyboard to win. The trick is that you can only summon things to your side of the board or in the proximity of your Planeswalker. From where we are, it is an exemplary sample of balanced game design, as it favors synergies between different units, preventing any of the players from accumulating a lot of power in a short period of time. The MTG Feel Despite the fact that we haven't played magic: The Gathering Arena as much as we should have, since we weren't big fans of ever-rotating ensembles, we thoroughly enjoyed the game's universe. From this perspective, we are certainly keeping a close eye on how ManaStrike develops. Whether it's history, permanent ones, or the skills themselves, this netmarble release will definitely make you feel like you're part of the MTG. Kudos universe, devs! We love the fact that players can buy season pass using gems. Although the latter are technically premium currency, you can get just playing. It won't be easy, but it's feasible. Given the pace of the game, you can easily enjoy a short break from work if you play magic: ManaStrike on BlueStacks. Each match lasts up to three minutes and, if no one manages to win at the moment, you get an additional 60 seconds to finish off your opponent. During this extension, the mana gain doubles, so hopefully things will get a little hectic. Basically you must be well ac familiar with your cards and hero in order to maintain your advantage. Otherwise, you can get steamrolled pretty hard in the last seconds of the match. Master the multiverse with BlueStacks you have to take advantage of the fact that there aren't many players right now and play ManaStrike at BlueStacks. What? Well, that gives you a chance to get on these leaderboards quite easily. The top 10 players in each season reap immense rewards in the form of cards (no less than 61 brass, 27 uncommon and 13 neutral with a 44% chance of dropping an extra gold). Right now, we just want the Devs to mount a respectable one-player campaign. Nor would we care if the latter gave us the ability to win gems based on our performance. KOFA has certainly been successful with this model, so we certainly look forward to seeing it at work at ManaStrike.
