Fortunately, you don't have to figure it all out yourself--there are great tools to help you do that. We've compiled the top five that will make you wonder when it's time to hit. CamelCamelCamelGraphic: camelcamelcamel.comCamelCamelCamel is one of our favorite ways to get discounts and track prices on Amazon products. You can install a browser extension (Chrome and Firefox) to access web features without leaving Amazon, or just copy and paste the Amazon link or product name on the website. CamelCamelCamel will show you how the price of items has risen or fallen over time, how prices have changed through Amazon directly and fluctuations from third party sellers who list new and used items on Amazon.If you sign up for a free account, you can set alerts so the site can notify you by email when the price of the item drops below a certain amount, if you can get it used at that price, or if it's at an all-time low and now is a good time to buy. You can even see previous historical highs and lows and try to map out the best time to strike. Honey users can also collect Honey Gold, a percentage back from online purchases in more than 4,500 stores. Gold can be traded for gift cards to stores such as Amazon, Groupm, Macy's and others. SlickDealsGraphic: slickdeals.netSlickDeals is well known for bringing you up-to-the-minute discounts, coupons and other deals from around the web, but their online price tracker is also great for tracking prices on almost any item on Amazon, and on tons of other popular shopping sites like Newegg, Gamestop, Chewy, Home Depot, and more. The service does not give you a detailed history than some of the others in roundup, but it will track the price of your item from the place where you create the warning for the future, and we'll send you an email if the price falls below the threshold you set. You can also go back to price tracking at any time, sign in to your account, and see all tracked items on the same screen. WikibuyGraphic: Wikibuy.comWikibuy, operated by Capital One, compares prices from other retailers when shopping on Amazon. The extension notifies you if the product you're looking at is cheaper elsewhere and offers a summary of your price history, estimated delivery time, and total price, including taxes and shipping. If you can use a coupon, it will add that too. When the price drops for the product you've viewed, Wikibuy notifies you. The extension is available for Chrome, Firefox, Edge, and Safari, and the iOS app lets you scan barcodes and search products to make your phone a price comparison. When you shop, you can get credits for purchases on some websites like Walmart and eBay that Wikibuy works with. You can trade that credit for a gift card or put it up for purchases through the Wikibuy site. CheapSharkGraphic: cheapshark.com While most others in the roundup focus on products like electronics, clothing, household goods and appliances, CheapShark sneaked into nominations as a great choice for gamers who want to save money on video games. CheapShark combines all great sites to get discounts on games in one place, one easy to search directory and database of current prices, from sites including Steam, CoG, Green Man Gaming, GameStop, Amazon, and more. Of course, it is limited to video games, but you can search for the name of the game not only to find out how much it will cost to buy, but also if you can buy at all-and which dealer has available. If you want, you can even filter by games that are currently on sale in select stores. When searching for a particular game, CheapShark will tell you what the cheapest-ever price was when it hit that price, and gives you a choice to either go ahead and buy it from your choice seller, or sign up for a price announcement if it drops again.
